THE MUSICIAN.

In a modest interior, a young man is seen seated with a 'cello between his knees, his head bent to enjoy the strains that arise from the strings under his bow. The surroundings are simple, but handled with the skill to be expected from the great Dutch painter.

An inscription on the back of the painting as to its authenticity is written, signed and dated by Josef Israels. The painting is also accompanied by a photograph on the back of which Israels has written that the photograph is from his painting "adagio con espressione" as he states in his own words.

Although this and the following painting are attributed to and described as being signed by Charles Jacque, there is some doubt as to the correctness of this attribution. They are, however, well executed paintings and should command attention on their own merits. They were purchased in Europe many years ago by present owner.
